Grace in her village in northern Uganda.

"We walk about 5 km to collect firewood. The stove saves me a lot of time because it uses less firewood."

Grace was given training by Oxfam's partner in Uganda who specifically focus on women's rights, children's rights and human rights. She was also given tips on effective parenting and how to build an eco-friendly, efficient cooking stove.

Providing warmth and a way to cook food, a fuel-efficient eco-stove reduces the need for firewood. Along with protecting more forests, it cuts down on the time spent by women and girls gathering scarce firewood. This in turn reduces the need for them to venture into unsafe areas where they are at risk of attack – and makes it one of the ways we help people stay safe after they've been forced to flee their homes in an emergency.

We ensure that families living in extreme poverty have a say in finding the best solution for them and we work with them to make that solution a reality. This means that the funds raised from your gift go where they're needed most to have maximum impact.
